WHITE HOUSE POOLS

A lot is known about the White House, but what about its swimming pools? Read on to find out.

4.1.

Andrew Jackson, the seventh American president, enjoyed gardening and swimming. There was no swimming pool in the grounds during his presidency, so every morning he walked down to the chilly waters of the nearby Potomac River. A refreshing 20-minute swim was just what he needed before his daily official duties.

4.2.

Franklin Roosevelt was the first president to have an indoor swimming pool built at the White House. Later, President Nixon decided to turn it into a press room. In 2007, the basement room was redesigned to accommodate all the wires for the electronic press. The sides of the pool became part of its walls.

4.3.

President Ford was in the habit of going for an after-work swim, so in 1976 an outdoor heated pool was built. It was also popular with other residents of the White House. They could use it even on cold winter afternoons. Ford's son often did scuba diving and snorkelling there and Amy Carter perfected her swimming technique when her father was the President.

4.4.

A small building was added to the outdoor pool, providing a place to get changed. It allows swimmers to avoid the attention of the public. An underground passage lets the president's family reach the building from the ground floor of the West Wing without being noticed by visitors.

Zadanie 5. (0–3)

Przeczytaj trzy teksty związane z zakupami. Z podanych odpowiedzi wybierz właściwą, zgodną z treścią tekstu. Zakreśl literę A, B albo C.

Tekst 1.

A shop known for its controversial owners shut after 170 years in business. It was called “Britain’s rudest shop”. The owners of the shop, Terry O’Brian and Jerry Edwards, didn’t think that the customer is always right. They fought against tactless clients and often asked them to leave the shop. In most stores, such behaviour would be unacceptable. But O’Brian & Edwards was a unique shop visited by local customers who accepted the owners’ ways. Their decision to retire and close the shop made many customers sad. Hundreds of people popped in to say goodbye.

adapted from www.independent.co.uk

5.1. The best title for the text would be

- A. RUDE SHOP ASSISTANTS FIRED
- B. THE END OF AN UNUSUAL SHOP
- C. GOOD NEWS FOR WORRIED CUSTOMERS

Tekst 2.

A PAIR OF JEANS

My job is to check how many items people are taking into the fitting room with them.

One day I notice a woman with a pile of clothes.

“Hi!” she says.

“Hi, how many items have you got?” I ask, looking at the jeans she’s holding. I remember them. The only pair in the shop reduced to £ 20, the price anybody would be ready to pay if the jeans were their size. And they are my size. They must be mine!

“Four,” she says.

“Actually, you can only take three. We have new regulations.” I lie.

“OK, well, I’ll leave out ...”

“These,” I say and grab the jeans.

“No,” she says. “Actually, I think I’ll ...”

“You have to leave the least expensive item,” I inform her. “Sorry.”

adapted from www.wenovel.com

5.2. The shop assistant does not allow the customer to take the jeans to the fitting room because

- A. the shop assistant wants them for herself.
- B. the regulations in the shop have changed.
- C. another customer has already paid for them.

Tekst 3.

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW

- If an item turns out to be damaged, broken or faulty in some way, you can return it and get your money back.
- If you change your mind about an item within a week, the salesperson should offer you a refund or let you exchange the item for something else in the store.
- If the price on the label is lower than what the shop assistant wants you to pay, ask to speak to the manager. The shop should sell it at a price displayed on the label, even if it is incorrect.

adapted from www.adviceguide.org.uk

5.3. The author of the text wants to

- A. advise customers to check things before buying them.
- B. discourage customers from exchanging goods.
- C. inform customers about their rights.

EXPERIENCE: I LIVE IN MY CAR

On 12 July 2006, I shut the door to “normal” life and decided to live in my car. I was a teacher but I didn’t enjoy it. My dream was to be a professional musician. I formed a band with some friends and we started playing in concerts. But I didn’t earn much so I had to reduce my expenses. The cheapest option was to move out of my flat. I wanted it to be a short experiment, but a few years have passed and my lifestyle hasn’t changed.

When people find out about my lifestyle, they all ask similar questions. How do you organize your life there? Where do you sleep? Where do you park? Well, first I needed to fit the tea and coffee facilities so I bought a travel kettle that plugs into the cigarette lighter. I also managed to sort out the sleeping arrangements. Moving forward the two front seats I created what I call the back-seat bedroom. It is far from comfortable, but still, it’s a good hideaway from the outside world. I’m happy because I can practise the guitar late into the night and nobody comes to complain that I’m too loud as nobody lives around. Unfortunately, there is too little space to cook any meals, so I have to eat out. I must also be careful where I park. I don’t want to pay a fine, so I always check for restrictions and never park in a forbidden place. I avoid parking near a school or church, because there is too much noise early in the morning.

It’s not paradise: there are still some monthly payments to be made, as well as taxes and insurance. In the summer, there’s the problem of the boiling heat and in the exceptionally cold winter of 2011, I sometimes found my bedclothes covered with frost, but I survived. There’s also no running water or refrigeration. Still, it is better than working in an office from nine to five. It’s not illegal to sleep in your car, but I’ve been woken a number of times by curious policemen. When they realise I’m not whoever it is they’re looking for, I’m free to go to sleep again. Another problem is that I do not have a home address, but I use my parents’ address for official correspondence.

People always thought I was eccentric and it took my family and friends some time to accept my way of life. They do not visit me but when we want to meet, I go to see them. And if a friend or relative needs a ride, I sometimes take them where they want to go. After all, I have a car and a lot of free time.

MEMORIES OF A HOLIDAY JOB

When I was a student, I lived in a small seaside town in South Wales. One glorious summer the council decided to employ some students to work on the beach. We decided to give it a try. Some of my friends were lifeguards or first-aiders. 7.1. _____ They spent most of their days riding up and down the promenade in an old Land Rover collecting rubbish.

My job was to take care of any children lost on the beach. We had a place in the shade with many toys and books. It was called the Lost Children's Garden and it was situated next to the first-aid post. 7.2. _____ They didn't have to wait long to be picked up. There was a loudspeaker system which allowed us to give the name and description of each 'lost' child. Our busiest time was when coaches full of tourists came to town. Many holidaymakers wanted to relax by the sea and taste our delicious fish and chips. 7.3. _____ We pointed out to the parents the place where the lost kids could be found.

adapted from <http://secretsofthesandpit.wordpress.com>

- A. Their children often got lost, but we were always there to help.
- B. When the worried parents came, their kids were not there.
- C. When I had no children to look after, I helped at the first-aid post.
- D. Others had to empty very large litter bins.
- E. The kids could play there until their parents appeared.
